INTRODUCTION.

THE collecting of Postage Stamps is a fashion not confined to this country, or to a single class; for collections are frequently to be seen in the drawing-room of the luxurious, in the study of the enlightened, and the locker of the schoolboy.

The fashion has been ridiculed, as all fashions will be; but if postage stamps are properly studied, collected, and arranged, there is no reason why they may not be quite as instructive and entertaining as the collection of birds, butterflies, shells, books, engravings, coins, or other objects.

The use and charm of collecting any kind of object is to educate the mind and the eye to careful observation, accurate comparison, and just reasoning on the differences and likenesses which they present, and so interest the collector in the design or art shown in their creation or manufacture, and the history of the country which produces or uses the objects collected. The postage stamps afford good objects for all these branches of study, as they are sufficiently different to present broad outlines for their classification; and yet some of the variations are so slight that they require minute examination and comparison to prevent them from being overlooked; and the fact of obtaining stamps from so many countries suggests to ask what were the circumstances that induced their adoption, the history of the countries which issue them, and the understanding why some countries have considered it necessary, in so few years as have passed since they first came into use, to make so many changes in the form or design of the stamp used, while other countries, like Holland, have never made the slightest change.

The changes referred to all mark some historical event of importance; such as the accession of a new king, a change in the form of government, or the absorption of a smaller state into some larger one, a change in the currency, or some other revolution. Hence a collection of postage stamps may be considered, like a collection of coins, an epitome of the history of Europe and America for the last quarter of a century; and at the same time, as they exhibit much variation in design and in execution, as a collection of works of art on a small scale, showing the style of art of the countries that issue them; while the size of the collection, and the manner in which they are arranged and kept, will show the industry, judgment, neatness, and taste of the collector, who should always bear in mind that every accessory that is showy and bright takes away from the appearance and interest of the stamps themselves.

I began to collect postage stamps shortly after the system was established and before it had become a rage, as I took a great interest in their use and extension; and I believe I was the first who proposed the system of a small uniform rate of postage to be prepaid by stamps, having satisfied my own mind that the great cost of the Post Office was not the reception, carriage, and delivery of the letters, but the complicated system of accounts that the old system required; and having learned from the best writers on political economy that the collection of money by stamps was the most certain and economical. It was, in fact, the mere application of the system used with regard to newspapers to letters in general.

I found, after considerable trouble, that there was little, or, indeed, I may say no chance of getting attention to the plans suggested, without I could devote the whole of my time and energy to the agitation and development of it, which was not consistent with my position in the British Museum,—an institution to which I had from a youth devoted my energies.

Fortunately Mr. (now Sir) Rowland Hill, who had leisure at his command by the dissolution of the South Australian Company, undertook the question, published several pamphlets on it, and with the assistance of Mr. G. Moffat, Mr. Henry Cole, Mr. Dillon, and sundry merchants and members of Parliament, whom they succeeded in interesting in the question, they carried the measure after very great exertion; and it has been a very great success, not only in a financial point of view, but also in what I considered a more important one, in spreading education and domestic intercourse among the people at large, and thereby increasing the happiness and well-being of the community.

Large as is the balance carried to the Revenue from the Post Office, the system proposed by me, and that propounded by Mr. Rowland Hill in his pamphlet, and which he and the other advocates of the change recommended before the Parliamentary and other Committees, have never been completely carried out; consequently a large staff of clerks and other officials is still retained at the Post Office, at a large expense, to keep the complicated accounts that a few unpaid letters require, which, if the system were fully carried out, would not be necessary.

I am aware that the prepayment of all letters by stamp is very difficult, if not impossible, to be carried out; but this is not necessary. There is no necessity for any account of unpaid letters to be kept, except in cases where the official suspects some unfair play; otherwise it might be left for the postmaster, through whose hands the unstamped letter last passes, to place the requisite stamps upon it, and to collect the cost of those stamps from the person to whom the letter is directed. This he is likely to do with care, as each postmaster is allowed a commission on all the stamps he sells; and to prevent, as much as possible, the sending of letters that would require this treatment, the system of paying double postage, or even a higher fine, should be enforced on all letters not paid for in stamps before they are despatched. It is said that the postmaster may lose, as many of the letters on which he has placed stamps may be refused. If so, they would be returned to the Dead-letter Office, and his stamps allowed for; but this will not be often requisite, as the Post Office can now enforce the payment against the sender if it be refused by the person to whom the letter is directed.

The postage prepaid by stamps has been adopted, as this list will prove, by many other countries, and has been extended into other branches of the Government and the law courts. It is also used in the electric telegraph companies, and in several errand and carrier companies in Europe and America.

Oddly enough, some collectors place the stamps used by the Hamburg and American private carrier companies with their postage stamps. This catalogue is confined to stamps issued by government post-offices; for if those used by private establishments were to be included, it would be difficult to define the limit.

While the subject was under discussion, an envelope was proposed surrounded by an engine-turned border, with the value and the weight it would carry marked in the corner; and during the discussion in Parliament various stamped covers were circulated by the advocates of the plan, to show the kind of envelope and stamp which they proposed should be used. They are now rare, and only to be seen in the albums of the wives and children of the members of the committee who preserved them.

In 1840, when the new system was established, two printed envelopes were issued bearing a design by Mulready, the Royal Academician, "with the hopes of spreading the taste for high art;" but they called forth such an outburst of ridicule, and such a number of caricatures, that they were soon disused; and then the engraved profile of the Queen was adopted as an adhesive stamp for affixing on letters, and after some time an embossed profile of the Queen was issued, stamped on paper as an envelope.

When the first adhesive stamps were issued they were printed in black ink; but it was found difficult to properly obliterate them either with black or red ink, and they were afterwards issued printed in different coloured ink, so that they can all be obliterated with the same black hand or machine stamp.

Some of the colonies commenced with manufacturing their own stamps, and used emblematic designs, as "Hope reclining," for the Cape of Good Hope; a "Swan," for Swan River; the "Queen on her Throne," for Victoria; but by degrees they have generally adopted a simple profile of the Queen, like the English; and the stamps now used in the colonies, and indeed in many parts of the world, are not only designed and engraved, but also printed or embossed, in England. Many of these are executed by Messrs. De la Rue & Co., of Bunhill Row, who call themselves, in the Directory, "Envelope Makers and Manufacturers of Government and Colonial Adhesive Stamps;" and Perkins, Bacon, & Co., in Fleet Street, "Bond and Bank Note Engravers." They are printed in these establishments under the supervision of an officer of the Inland Revenue department, or an inspector appointed by the Colonial governments.

The majority of foreign governments, as they have adopted the system, have also adopted the profile or portrait of their sovereign for the stamp. Other governments use the arms of the state or sovereign for the purpose.

Some states, which began by merely using a number surrounded by a more or less complicated frame as a stamp, have gradually adopted the royal portrait.

In England, the manner in which the stamps have been obliterated has undergone many changes; now they are obliterated by a block, which, by the form of the internal disk, and the number in it, marks the postal district in which it was originally stamped. Each Continental state obliterates in its own manner; several have undergone considerable change during the time the stamps have been in use. In France they not only obliterate with a hand-stamp, but the stamp used has acute prominences on it, so as to perforate the stamp when they obliterate it. The study of the means employed for this simple purpose affords an interesting object of contemplation.

In some of the outlying offices in India, Ceylon, &c., the stamp is obliterated by the sender with a pen and ink before the letter is despatched.

In most countries the adhesive stamp and the envelope stamp are different,—the one being printed from a surface, and the other embossed; this is even the case in Prussia, where the design of the two stamps are the same; but, lately, Austria has issued the same embossed design both as a denticulated adhesive stamp and as an envelope. In a few localities the envelopes are only stamped with a simple hand-stamp.

In England the Stamp Office will place an embossed stamp on any paper that is sent to them for that purpose. So that the embossed stamps are circulated in very different forms and kinds of paper. They also permit embossed rings with the name of a firm, as Smith, Elder, & Co., and others, to be printed at the same time and in the same manner as the stamp; and stamps so circulated have been regarded as distinct kinds of stamps, when in fact they are only means of advertisement used by certain private firms.

The first English adhesive stamps were printed with black ink, and obliterated first with black and then with red ink. This was found inconvenient, and since then they have been printed with red and blue inks, and obliterated with black.

Some few stamps, as the old  $\frac{1}{2}$  anna stamp of India, the "too late" and "registered" stamps of South Australia, the stamps of some of the Swiss Cantons, and some of the more modern embossed stamps of the United States, are printed in inks of two colours.

The Russian and Polish adhesive stamps are printed in three colours. They are the most beautiful stamps that have yet been issued.

Some of the German States issued their first stamps printed in black ink on different coloured papers; but they have, one after another, given up the practice, and now issue the stamps printed with different coloured inks on white paper. Some of them, as Hanover, print the stamps with black ink, or, rarely, coloured ink, on white paper, and then cover the whole stamp with a coloured network.

The different German States seem to have changed the colour of the paper or the ink with which they printed the stamps at different times very capriciously, hence the same stamp occurs of very different colours. They are said to have adopted a uniform colour for stamps of the same value, thus:—

- 4 pfennige, or  $\frac{1}{2}$  silbr. gr., or 1 kr. Green.
- 6 pfennige, or  $\frac{1}{2}$  silbr. gr. Orange.
- 1 silbr. gr., or 3 kr. Red.
- 2 silbr. gr., or 6 kr. Blue.
- 3 silbr. gr., or 9 kr. Brown.

The dies, before they are used, are often proved, by regulation of the Stamp Office, with a different coloured ink from that under which they are legally issued; some of these proofs have got into collections: they are called essai in the French catalogue; translated by some—essays!

The Australian Colonies sometimes send out the same stamps of different shades of colour.

For these reasons, I have not considered any change in the colour of the stamp as a different stamp; for it is certainly the same, whether it is on green or white paper, or printed in black, red, or green ink.

Formerly, some of these stamps were printed from copper-plates; but now, almost all the stamps are printed from wooden or metal blocks; the metal blocks being all struck from a single die, and then placed in a frame containing a certain number of stamps; the blocks are inked with rollers like letter-press printing, which is far more economical, both in labour and time. The die of the embossed stamps is inked on the surface; hence it is the sunken part that is coloured, while the raised part is the original colour of the paper. This fact has not been sufficiently observed, for some stamps, which differed in this respect, have been regarded as belonging to the same type.

In England, the adhesive stamps are printed on paper with a peculiar water-mark, different in the various stamps; and the envelopes issued by the English Stamp Office are all printed on a peculiar paper. Formerly there were three lines of coloured silk inserted in the paper, so as to form a line across the stamp; and several foreign governments adopted the same plan. It has now been disused in England and Germany; but in the latter they print in small letters, the value of the envelope, in three lines, over the stamp, thus: Post couvert, Drei groschen; Ein groschen, Post couvert.

In Russia, the envelopes are embossed on paper prepared for the purpose, with the Russian spread-eagle for a water-mark, with different patterns according to the value.

In England, the regulation is that the stamp should be placed on the upper right-hand corner of the letter or envelope.

In Saxony, Hanover, Baden, Brunswick, and Austria the stamp was formerly placed on the left-hand side of the envelope; now, they are usually placed, as in England, on the upper right-hand corner. In some lists and collections these are considered different stamps.

In Russia, the stamps of the envelopes are placed on the flap of the envelope; and in the Brazils, the stamps are used as a seal; this causes them sometimes to be overlooked by the English Post Office.

All stamps are not marked with the name of the country by which they are issued. The name of the coin marked on them is interesting, and may lead, in doubtful cases, to the discovery of their origin.

This list is confined to the postage stamps which are issued by the different governments.

I have therefore excluded the stamps issued by different private persons or companies who carry letters or parcels, or electric telegraph messages, and which have found it convenient to issue stamps. They are no more postage stamps than the stamps issued by the Inland Revenue Office for fiscal purposes.

There will not be found in it the stamps issued by Hamer's Hamburg Boten, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, or the different City expresses; or errand and carrier offices of the United States, which have often been regarded as postage stamps, and entered as such in the lists published by different persons. They would doubtless form an interesting collection by themselves, showing how convenient the collecting of revenue by stamps has been found.

The desire which some persons have to show stamps that are not in other collections has induced the dealers to produce pretended stamps, which have no real existence; as, for example, a French stamp with the portrait of the Republic, inscribed, Essai, 1858, which is after the "Empire" was established; or Turkish stamps, inscribed 6 Truze and 3 Mara, the Turkish Government not having as yet issued any stamps. Some collectors show Chinese stamps, which are only the impression of the seal of the mandarin who sent the letter. In the same manner, and for the same purpose, the colours of some stamps are artificially changed by soaking in water or some chemical fluid, or the stamps are covered over with a wash of colour, or the paper on which they are printed is stained. Some of the stamps that were issued by the Provisional Government that followed the outbreak in Europe of 1848 have been withdrawn from circulation, and become rare, and therefore sell at a large price; this has induced some French dealers in them to have them imitated or forged. They are known from the real stamps, as they are lithograph, while the originals were block-printed.

The postage stamps are extensively used in this country as a species of paper money. To facilitate this use, the post-offices throughout this country have lately been directed to receive postage stamps, at a small discount, from any one that may present them in a clean state and more than two united together.

During the terrible Civil conflict in the late "United States" they form almost the only currency of small value in circulation; and the Government issued them without being gummed for the purpose of their being so used, as it was found that the gummed stamps were apt to adhere together when carried and handled.

After the English name of the country or place where the stamp is issued, follows the foreign name of the place, or title of the king, or other inscription that may be on the stamps of that locality. In the description of the individual stamps, the lettering which is on the stamps is printed in italic. The list is arranged geographically, commencing with those of Great Britain and her colonies, and each country in succession, with its colonies or dependencies.
